Bible Access & Engagement

Millions have Scripture in their language, but not in their lives. How do we move from access to transformation—where the word shapes hearts. homes, and whole communities?

The Upstream Problem

Nearly one billion people already have Scripture in their language—yet cannot access it in a usable form. Poverty, illiteracy, conflict, persecution, and fragile infrastructure prevent individuals and churches from receiving, understanding, or living out God's Word. When Scripture remains inaccessible, discipleship stalls, churches weaken, and Gospel movements lose momentum.

For generations, Bible distribution and engagement efforts were faithful but fragmented—focused on delivery or content in isolation rather than the full pathway from access to transformation. Even as translation accelerates, gaps in format, security, literacy, and discipleship have left vast populations with Scripture that exists, but cannot be effectively used.

Today, innovation, collaboration, and shared outcomes have made it possible to close this gap. The challenge is no longer whether access and engagement can happen—but whether capital and partnerships will be aligned to ensure translation leads to transformation.

The Solving Bible Access & Engagement Fund supports organizations working at the critical intersection between Scripture translation and spiritual formation. It lifts up problem-solvers advancing secure distribution, contextual formats, and engagement pathways that help individuals and churches read, hear, share, and live God's Word.
