Structural Hunger

More than 378 milion suffer from structural hunger. What can be done?

The Upstream Problem

Hunger is the fault line beneath countless crises, the base problem on which so many others rest. It drives sickness, disease, and death, fuels desperation that erodes values and leaves entire communities vulnerable to exploitation and instability. Solve hunger, and the scaffolding of suffering built on it begins to collapse.

By the numbers: 673 million people—8.2% of the world's population—are undernourished. Of these, 295 million face acute hunger, driven by sudden shocks such as war, drought, or economic collapse. The larger share—378 million people—suffer from structural hunger, rooted in low agricultural productivity, broken supply chains, and limited income or purchasing power. Unlike acute hunger, which demands a humanitarian response, structural hunger can be solved through market-based solutions. This is the focus of the SWGP Solving Hunger Fund.

SWGP Giving Funds unite world-class portfolio management with the Faith Driven content and community you trust—transforming generosity into impact.
